THE DAY IN WALL STREET.

Special Disputch.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—The market to-day was unusually active and strong. Perhaps it is as well to concede the settlement of the railroad dispute. This was accomplished several days ago by the purchase of Omaha property by Vanderbilt at a high price. It is understood the Omaha directors will resign immediately, and it is rumored to-day that a consolidation, with an exchange of Omaha stock upon some basis, will follow, with Northwestern. The market has been greatly stimulated by these reports, and there has been a general clearing out of the short interest. It is reported that Woerishoffer bought in about forty thousand shares for shorts and this greatly affected the market. Randall & Wisener bought in 15,000 shares of Western Union alone for this account. Baroes also bought in Western Union largely. On the second call the general list was stronger and higher.

solved to cut down its allowance for mail transportation to about one half its present Western Union directors declared the usual 11 per cent. dividend, payable January 15. It was decided not to increase the dividends just at the close of the year, but to begin with an increase on the first of the year.

of an exchange of stock on some sort of basis for Northwest. E. H. Harriman & Co. and Groesbeck &

Schley were the principal sellers of Union Pacific at top prices of the day. These orders were supposed to be for their

Washington correspondents. It is announced that the Delaware, Lackawana and Western iron and steel works at Scranton will resume work next week. Western Union reports a surplus for last quarter of $2,667,097, and earnings for current quarter (estimated partly) at $2,150,000, after Large operators are pledged on bull side. They are pushing prices for all they are worth. They were helped yesterday and this morning by covering of the short interests. There is no general or outside speculation yet. Maintaining of prices will depend on the patience and ability of present holders. Stocks are now concentrated in fewer hands than for a long time, and would seem that they will try to hold until a general outside speculation springs up again.

During the last half hour there was a recovery of ‡ per cent. in the general list, and the market closed with a good demand for stocks.

Young Parsons from Cape Ann.

Yesterday a policeman took him to Mr. Blake, at 66 Third avenue. The lad was about 11 years old. He will be had lad was about 11 years old. Her will he had been away from home since last spring. Mr. Blake asked him how he liked to live in New York. "It's first class here in summer," the boy replied, "but when cold weather comes on the streets are too crowded. I spent a good deal of my time here with Superintendent O'Connor at the newsboys' lodging house, It's nice to sell papers. It's rather nicer, though, to fish on warm days at Cape Ann. What makes me auxious to get home is that I read the other day they had awful 'good catches' down there this fall. If that is so, father will be glad to see me, and there'll be calches' down there this fall. If that is so, father will be glad to see me, and there'll be a dreadful nice time at Christmas. My father is Capt, William Parsons, and I am Will Parsons. There are eight other Parsonses like me at home, and so one is not missed." Mr. Blake sent the boy home yesterday afternoon.

RESURRECTION REMINISCENCES. Squire McMallen Recalls the Time When He Watched Graveyard Ghouls.

Philadelphia Press.
The revelations of the Press in regard to the desceration of the graves in Lebanos cemetery recalls reminiscences of the exploits of the ghouls who many years ago plied their revolting calling in the southeastern section of the city. "I remember that a good many years ago," said "Squire McMullen in speaking of the Prees's capture last evening. "We used to watch several people down in this section with lively curiosity as to how they made a living. There was an old fellow named George Alberti, who bore the name of a resurrectionist. We never could get the proof on him, though I remember that a man named McCloskey, who lived on Seventh street, below Fizwater street, did many a queer turn which caused a lot of talk. McCloskey had a brother-in-law—I think his name was Kane—and the two had the reputation of taking home more helplessly drunken men' than did any hundred of the drinking people in the neighborhood. Many of the members of the Moyamensing Hose who lived in the old district of Southwark talked about seeing McCloskey and Kane rolling up Passynik avenue about midnight with what seemed to be a drunken man supported between them." The squire rently smiled as he recalled the reminiscence, revolting calling in the southeastern section and Rane reiting up rassyning avenue arounding the with what seemed to be a drunken man supported between them." The 'squire gently smiled as he recalled the reminiscence, and added: "Our people always said, in speaking about the matter, that 'Mac' was taking another stiff to one of the colleges. Why," excitedly continued the select councilman from the fourth ward, "the boys of the hose company, when a member died, made up a scheme to watch his grave or that of any of his family. We used to go down to St. Joseph's cemeterry at Seventh street and Passyunk road, and as far down as St. Mary's, below the prison. Many a time have we taken turns in watching graves as long as four or five weeks after the bodies had been buried. In winter time we had buffalo robes to cover us, and with pipes and tobacco the time was passed away until morning. Several times, as I have been told," concluded the 'squire, 'Mac and his dead and live partners took the Ninth street course up either to the 'squire, "Mac and his dead and live partners took the Ninth street course up either to the university, which was then on Ninth street, above Chestnut, or to the Jefferson college, at Tenth and Sansom streets." Another old resident of the district of Southwark stretched dent of the district of Southwark stretched his recollection of illegal resurrections as far back as 1840. "St. Joseph's cemetery," said this ancient individual, "occupied all the ground about that year, from its present posi-tion across what is now called Washington avenue. When the cutting was made for the railway company to put a track down it was agreed. Prime street and a prime time the named Prime street, and a prime time the body snatchers had in those days," chuckled the old man. "I remember that Sprogle gave me a fine fright one night."

body snatchers had in those days," chuckled the old man. "I remember that Sprogle gave me a fine fright one night."

"Who was Sprogle," was asked.

"Oh, he was a hard one," replied the old resident. "He kept the Point house, at Greenwich point, opposite Gloucester. He and some of his Neck gang got a drover down in his house one winter and nearly killed him after robbing him. They thought he was dead and they threw him under a bridge. He beat them if they thought they had a subject for the college, as the cold air revived him and he lived long enough to have Ned Sprogle convicted and put in prison. Forty years ago I lived where Passyunk road and Federal streets are now on the city map, and I was going to tell you about the way I was frightened when you interrupted me about Sprogle's history. One night about 1844, I think it was, I had left old man Givin's grocery store at the corner of Carpenter street. It was a pretty cold night, and I was trotting along to keep warm. Just as I got to the high wooden fence which ran around St. Joseph's cemetery, where Father Barbelin has since been buried, the body of a dead woman was flung across the fence in front of me. It gave me the cold shivers and my hair rose on end. I could see the white shroud, and I never shall forget the sight. There the poor dead woman lay, and as I involuntarily backed up the street I saw the devilish face of Sprogle and another mam raised over the fence to see what had become of their prey. The oil street lamp showed me this much, and, as I was not armed, I left the spot, knowing the desperate character of Sprogle and the man who went with him.

In the following, which was written to the Liverpool Mercary, be true, there is nothing very alarming in small-pox. Mr. Hine says: "I am willing to risk my reputation as a public man if the worst case of small-pox cannot be cured in three days, simply by the use of cream of tartar. One ounce of cream of tartar dissolved in a pint of water, drank at intervals when cold, is a certain, never-failing remedy. It has cured thousands, never leaves a mark, nor causes blindness, and avoids tedious, lingering illness."
